

STEPHEN ONGPIN FINE ART

Paul Nash (1889 - 1946)

Maiden Castle, Dorset

Watercolour, red chalk and pencil on paper.

Signed Paul Nash at the lower left.

Indistinctly inscribed with colour notes in pencil at the lower right centre.

Titled and dated Maiden Castle / (Dorset) / traces for / painting on the verso.

289 x 403 mm. (11 3/8 x 15 7/8 in.)

This magnificent late watercolour of Maiden Castle in Dorset was drawn in the early 1940's, at a time when Nash seems to have preferred watercolour to oil for his landscapes. As Andrew Causey has noted, '[Nash's] late landscape watercolours are a remarkable advance even on those of 1925, which mark the peak of his achievement in this area hitherto. From 1938 his pictures become increasingly relaxed, he worked more in terms of tonal gradation and intensity of colour which grew more vibrant as drawing became less important; some underdrawing in soft pencil or black chalk is usual to the end, but it was employed increasingly to briefly mark out the composition rather than to define forms.'

Maiden Castle is an Iron Age hill fort – one of the largest and most complex hill forts in Europe – situated near the town of Dorchester in Dorset. Nash was greatly inspired by Maiden Castle, a place he adored and venerated. He photographed the site in 1935, when it was being excavated by Dr. Mortimer Wheeler, and wrote about it in his text for the Dorset Shell Guide, published in 1936: 'Maiden Castle has been described as the largest and most perfect earthwork in the world. To say it is the finest in Dorset is, perhaps, enough, for in no part of any country, I believe – not even in Wiltshire, where Avebury stands – can be found so complete a sequence of hill architecture... The Maiden... is in the form of an irregular oval. Its measurements are 400 yards wide and 900 yards long. The outer circumference amounts to two miles, enclosing an area of 130 acres. It is a phenomenon which must be seen to be believed if you consider that it was constructed throughout a series of occupations, the earliest of which can be ascribed to a period approaching 2000 B.C. Its presence to-day, after the immense passage of time, is miraculously undisturbed; the huge contours strike awe into even the most vulgar mind; the impervious nitwits who climbed on to the monoliths of Stonehenge to be photographed, slink out of the shadow of the Maiden uneasily.'

This fine watercolour dates from Nash's trip to Dorset with his friend Lance Sieveking in September 1943. Sieveking was a Regional Programme Director for the BBC, with Dorset one of the five counties for which he was responsible, and he asked Nash – who had written the Dorset Shell Guide several years earlier – to accompany him on a tour of the county. Together they visited Maiden Castle, Chalbury, Cerne Abbas, Dorchester and the Isle of Portland. In his autobiography, published in 1957, Sieveking recalled that they travelled 'back and forth, across that beautiful county, in sunny days and warm clear nights, stopping ever and again for Paul to draw, to make notes, to take photographs, and to scan the distance through powerful field-glasses. He said that through field-glasses one sees a landscape that one can see in no other way.' Shortly after their return, Nash wrote to Sieveking that 'Looking back over the great voyage to the hills and the heaths and the sea, it seems all a dream but most favourably a dream remembered – and so incredibly varied – I shall never quite get over it...I am pleased with my drawings and have hopes of making something from them.'

The present sheet may be claimed as one of Paul Nash's finest late watercolours. As one scholar has written of the artist, 'it was as a water-colourist that Nash must be acknowledged to have been supreme, watercolour, the most subtle of all media being entirely suited to the most poetic origins of his imagination. The results that he obtained with it are, however, altogether broader and grander in effect than those normally associated with its use...'

Provenance:

Arthur Tooth & Sons, London, in November 1943
Jeffrey Dell, by 1948
His sale, London, Sotheby's, 3 April 1963, lot 129
Arthur Tooth & Sons, London, in 1963
Commander Sir Michael Culme-Seymour, 5th Bt., Rockingham, Northamptonshire and nr. Bridport, Dorset
Thence by descent to his stepdaughter, Gemma Nesbitt, Bridport, Dorset.

Exhibitions

London, Tate Gallery, Paul Nash: A Memorial Exhibition, 1948, no.110 (lent by Dell); London, The Arts Council, Paul Nash's Camera: An Exhibition of Photographs by the Artist, 1951, no.49 (lent by Dell); Edinburgh, Scottish National Gallery of Modern Art, Paul Nash 1889-1947, 1974, no.20 (lent by Culme-Seymour).

Literature:

Margot Eates, ed., Paul Nash: Paintings, Drawings and Illustrations, London, 1948, p.53 (incorrectly listed as having been exhibited at the Redfern Gallery in London in 1937), pp.64 and 78, pl.70 (incorrectly dated 1937); Anthony Bertram, Paul Nash: The Portrait of an Artist, London, 1955, pp.238 and 323 (incorrectly dated 1935); Sir John Rothenstein, Paul Nash, Norwich, 1961, unpaginated, illustrated alongside pl.11 (incorrectly dated 1935); Margot Eates, Paul Nash: The Master of the Image 1889-1946, London, 1973, p.126 (incorrectly dated 1935); David Brown, Paul Nash 1889-1947, exhibition catalogue, Edinburgh, 1974, pp.18-19, no.20; London, Tate Gallery, Paul Nash: paintings and watercolours, 1975, pp.99-100, no.207; Andrew Causey, Paul Nash, Oxford, 1980, p.323, pl.390, p.462, no.1156; Pennie Denton, Seaside Surrealism: Paul Nash in Swanage, Swanage, 2002, p.72, illustrated in colour pl.14; David Boyd Haycock, Another Life Another World: Paul Nash Watercolours 1910-1946, exhibition catalogue, 2014, pp.78-79, no.33.

Artist description:

Throughout his career, the landscape painter Paul Nash found considerable inspiration in the countryside of Britain, and in particular areas with an essence of ancient history. As the Nash scholar Andrew Causey has noted, 'The natural world afforded Nash unique spiritual refreshment, and he drew from nature in almost all periods of his career...Landscape offered Nash the possibility of a more personal artistic expression, and subjected him to greater discipline since he had to translate specific visual information into his drawings.'