Sam SZAFRAN (Paris 1934 - Paris 2019)

Untitled (Plants)

Watercolour on paper; a page from a large sketchbook.

Signed Szafran in pencil at the lower centre.

737 x 476 mm. (29 x 18 3/4 in.)

Throughout his career, Sam Szafran concentrated on a small range of subjects, notably views of the interior of his studio and of a staircase in an apartment building on the rue de Seine in Paris. Drawn in 1986 or 1987, this very large watercolour depicts another of the artist's favourite subjects; the plants which filled his Parisian studio. For over fifty years, Szafran produced what he called 'feuillages', or studies of potted plants in interior spaces. As the artist's friend James Lord has written of these 'feuillages' by Szafran, 'Then there is a leap into the universe of vegetation. Plants. Infinite interstices of leaves in their imperceptible palpitation, profusion, perfection, each leaf limned upon the vibrant air with horticultural precision. Aerial tendrils dangling down through the multitudinous greenery, seeking sustenance even as they provide its structure. Stalks and stems sprouting and supporting: the armature of this dense but fragile vegetal architecture...the glimpse we occasionally catch of a human presence amidst the luxuriant, polymorphous foliage is fragmentary, fleeting. Verdure endures alone and exuberant in the fructification of itself.'

As the artist himself has noted of such works as this, 'My obsession with plants has found here...its best grounds to express itself. These large watercolours are the negative of the positive of the blue leaf pastels of the 1970s. They are the result of chain reactions that provoke continuous deviations.'

James Lord adds that 'Szafran's staircases and plants are the output of an eye dedicated to the absolutism of its own experience, disciplined by self-effacement before what sight alone can convey to the senses but submissive at the same time to the sublimating want of self-expression. Proceed with caution upon these stairs and amongst the vegetation. Aesthetic delight is dangerous. The pleasure of familiar forms is deceptive...Seeing Szafran shows how wonderfully well looking can think.'

Throughout much of Sam Szafran's career, his work was acquired by a coterie of enthusiastic and devoted collectors. Prominent among these was the French-American businessman and passionate collector William Louis-Dreyfus (1932-2016), who assembled an exceptional group of works by the artist that spanned several decades of his career.

Artist description:

Born Samuel Berger in Paris in 1934 to Polish immigrants, Sam Szafran took the maiden name of his mother when he began to sign his works in the 1960s. Although he was briefly enrolled at the Académie de la Grande-Chaumière in Paris in the mid 1950's, he was largely self-taught as an artist. He exhibited at the Salon des Indépendants in 1957 and two years later at the Salon des Réalités Nouvelles. While his earliest work was based in abstraction, from around 1960 onwards he began to depict representational subjects, drawn in dry pastels, charcoal or watercolour. Content with studying a limited range of subjects - notably studio interiors, staircases and plant forms - Szafran produced numerous drawings, each characterized by a very skillful handling of the medium and an abiding interest in perspectival effects.

From 1965 onwards Szafran's work was exhibited extensively in France, and also in Switzerland, but only rarely elsewhere. Szafran contributed to the Nouvelle Subjectivité exhibitions curated by Jean Clair in Paris in 1976 and Brussels in 1979. His work continues to be exhibited widely, and works by Szafran are today in the collections of the Museum of Modern Art in New York, the Hirshhorn Museum in Washington, D.C., the Centre National d'Art Contemporain and the Musée d'Art Moderne in Paris, and elsewhere. A retrospective exhibition of his work was recently held at the Fondation Pierre Gianadda in Martigny, Switzerland.
